It's a crisp September night... in downtown New York. Michelle Williams and I sat on the veranda of the Shire Hotel, looking across the river. The sun was setting and the sky was filled with pink and orange clouds. I was holding a book in my lap and reading it. I had just finished a chapter and was about to turn the page when I heard a noise. It sounded like a bird chirping. I looked up and saw a small bird perched on a branch above me. It was a sparrow. I was so surprised that I dropped the book. The bird flew away and landed on the ground. I picked up the book and continued to read. After a few minutes, I heard another noise. This time it sounded like a small animal running. I looked around and saw a squirrel running across the grass. I was so taken by the beauty of the scene that I forgot about my book. I sat there for a long time, watching the birds and animals. It was a peaceful and serene moment.
